Making safety the number one priority

Give safety time and make sacrifices; if resources are under pressure and you need to make sacrifices, you sacrifice something else other than safety," said Jeremy Fish, managing director of Nationwide Platforms, to an audience of about 300 at the IPAF Summit on 17 March 2016 in Madrid, Spain.

Playing a short but highly professional jazz interlude on his saxophone, Mr Fish went on to illustrate how discipline, commitment and passion – principles that apply to music – should be applied to safety.

Safety protects revenues, he explained, citing cases of how UK companies have coughed up a total of £82 million in fines for safety breaches over the last five years, with several companies eventually ceasing to trade. "What do you do to avoid compromising safety if you have to economise? Whatever it takes," was his advice. "You don't have to focus on equipment to be safe; you can focus on behaviour. Safe behaviour doesn't involve cost. Speak up when you witness something dangerous. Question, take ownership, share incidents and near-misses."

Mr Fish challenged IPAF and its membership to stop paying lip service to safety. Noting that more member companies should be reporting accidents involving mobile elevating work platforms (MEWPs) at IPAF's incident database (www.ipaf.org/incident), he said: "My message to the IPAF membership is this. If you are really serious about safety, then why is it that so few of you have submitted near-miss reports to the IPAF accident reporting database since its inception four years ago? This isn't information sharing. This isn't learning. This isn't being serious about safety. "I think that a number of you shouldn't be here and should leave IPAF."

He also proposed that IPAF should raise standards by auditing new and existing members: "My message to IPAF is this. If you are really serious about safety, why do you let any MEWP provider organisation join? Are you more interested in membership numbers and fees or driving safety standards? I think we should be auditing new and existing members, insisting that they uphold certain standards – standards that are worthy of the IPAF badge. Let's not tolerate mediocrity and second best."

Mr Fish's talk was just one of a host of top-class presentations, among them from Brad Boehler, president of Skyjack, and Pedro Torres, COO at Riwal. Mr Boehler discussed efforts by manufacturers and the UK Health & Safety Executive (HSE) to create a new international standard for controls on MEWPs, while Mr Torres provided strategies to break the cycles in the rental business, which he predicted would become hyper-cyclical.

The next IPAF Summit will be held with the International Awards for Powered Access (IAPAs) on 4 April 2017 in London Wembley, UK. Watch for event details at www.iapa-summit.info

Instructors get new learning

PAF certified instructors were given a preview of new learning tools that are set to rejuvenate IPAF's full training programme for operators of mobile elevating work platforms (MEWPs).

The new generation learning tools were the central theme at this year's series of IPAF Professional Development Seminars (PDS), which were attended by more than 683 instructors and covered 23 countries and 8 languages.

The new tools include an eLearning theory module which delivers flexibility and interactivity, as well as an instructor-led theory course that uses the same state-of-the-art graphics, animations and learning techniques. What remains the same in IPAF's operator training programme is the focus on practical training. Only trainees who pass a supervised theory test and a practical test are awarded a PAL Card (Powered Access Licence) as proof of training.

IPAF instructors trained a record number of 145,094 people in 2015. This IPAF training centres in the UK, US and Canada started using the new learning tools from 4 April 2016; other languages will follow in the course of the year.

President's Award for Evelyn Low

his year's IPAF President's Award goes to Evelyn Low, IPAF South East Asia regional manager. This was announced at the IPAF annual general meeting in Madrid.

The IPAF President's Award honours and recognises the commitment of individuals in furthering the aims and objectives of the Federation.

Presenting the award, IPAF president Andy Studdert said: "This year's winner is enthusiastic, dedicated, hardworking, and always has a smile on her face. She has had a significant impact on opening new markets."

Milestones from the IPAF annual report

PAF's turnover in 2015 increased to £5.0 million (approximately €7.0 million or US$7.5 million) which represents growth of an impressive 7.2% compared with 2014. Read about more milestones in IPAF's annual report, available in seven languages, at the Publications section of www.ipaf.org

Going into Turkey and the Nordic and Baltic regions

PAF has appointed two country representatives to support its growing membership in Turkey, and in the Nordic and Baltic regions.

She is an occupational health and safety (OHS) professional based in Ankara, in her capacity as general manager at Platin OHS Consulting, Engineering & Trade Services. She is also an OHS expert and trainer, certified by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MoLSS), Turkey. Prior to that, she served as an OHS expert for eight years at the Directorate General of Occupational Health and Safety (DGOHS) under MoLSS.
